FILM SCREENING AND DISCUSSION

Facilitated by Fatimah Williams-Castro, Anthropology

Noris Mosquera, one of the nearly 4 million Afrocolombians violently displaced since 1990 because she lives in an area prized for its natural resources and development opportunities, dreams of helping her son leave their refugee shelter for a soccer academy in the capital city of Bogotá. She will do all she can to make his dream a reality. Uprooted, a powerful award-winning documentary film, explores the complexities of displacement, racial identity, opportunity, and the power of resilience in Colombia. Come see this important film and discuss it with a Rutgers scholar who has recently returned from a year of fieldwork in Colombia.
