Life on the Edge: Immigrants Confront the American Health System

A LECTURE AND DISCUSSION WITH

ALEJANDRO PORTES

A noted sociologist who has profoundly reshaped the study of immigration and urbanization, Professor Alejandro Portes (Princeton University) examines how well health care organizations are currently meeting the needs of immigrant populations. Approximately one in nine U.S. residents is now foreign born, and both immigrants and their children are significantly more likely to be uninsured than the native population. What challenges do health care facilities face in treating rapidly growing numbers of diverse immigrant patients who might be poor, uninsured, or non-English speakers?
