Surveillance and Segregation

The Case of the Roma: a Flashpoint for Racial and Ethnic Discrimination in Post-Holocaust Europe

Roma people are the largest minority group in the European Union, with an estimated population of around 10 million, a large percentage of whom live below the poverty line. This panel discussion considers the recent rise in discrimination and hate crime against the Roma as a case study for understanding the relationship between ongoing racial tensions in Europe and issues such as economic downturn, political upheaval, spatial segregation, immigration, nationalism, and criminal justice.
