What role do race and ethnicity play in right-wing politics? How are race and ethnicity mobilized by the right? How has the relationship of conservative thought and ideas about race and ethnicity changed across recent history? How does the right confront or perpetuate racism and/or ethnic bias--and how does this differ from the left? Join an interdisciplinary panel of Rutgers faculty who work on the literature, politics, history, and culture of political ideologies to discuss these and other questions about race and ethnicity in conservative settings.
