On April 19 1989, a white woman was assaulted and raped in Central Park. Later that night, five black teenagers were charged with her attack. In a hasty attempt to bring someone to justice, they were tried, convicted, and sentenced to lengthy jail terms. However, none of these teenagers attacked her. Twenty-five years later, they are still trying to get their lives back after a wrongful conviction.

Please join us for a screening of the critically acclaimed documentary Central Park Five, by Ken Burns, David McMahon, and Sarah Burns, which reveals the suffering endured by men still seeking justice. After the documentary, we will hear commentary from Nina Siulc, Assistant Professor of Anthropology and Criminal Justice (Rutgers-NB).

Food & Refreshments will be served.
